

Faculty of Law

By providing specialized education in law and government in a systematic and hierarchical fashion, the Faculty of Law provides students with a deeper understanding of legal concepts, instilling the knowledge necessary to determine the significance of laws and understand discussion of their interpretation, and heightens an awareness of the systems of law, the courts and government, and their operation at the international, national and regional levels. The courses are designed to provide students with the specialized knowledge in law and politics needed to flexibly resolve a wide variety of issues. To implement this educational approach, the course of study consists of classes and practice based on research results in individual areas within the broad fields of law and government, providing students with legal minds through specialized knowledge and practical competence. The goal of the Faculty is to train legal minds capable of offering practical solutions to the complex issues, incidents and discords of modern society, applying flexible thinking, a systematic approach and balanced judgment in a comprehensive and ethical manner.

Department of Jurisprudence

Students in the Department of Jurisprudence study the law and government through a systematic curriculum that nurtures talented graduates with a solid understanding of the legal basics, who can interpret things from a legal perspective. To assist students in effectively entering their desired careers after graduation, the curriculum is divided into three courses: General Law, Law and Public Affairs, and General Policy. The General Law course is designed for students planning careers in law, related specialty fields, or business, covering the fundamentals of law. The Law and Public Affairs course covers primarily public and international law, and is intended for students hoping to enter public service or the foreign service. The General Policy course focuses on government and policy and is intended for students planning to work in local society, welfare, the media, and similar fields.

Department of Business Law

The Department of Business Law aims at producing graduates prepared for the responsibility of business management, aided by a thorough knowledge of both law and management, and professionals capable of meeting the challenges of international business. To assist students in attaining their goals, the curriculum is divided into two courses: Business Management and International Studies. The Business Management course serves the needs of students planning on becoming entrepreneurs or operating their own businesses, providing them with practical legal knowledge in corporate management. The International Studies course is designed for students interested in trade, foreign-capital businesses, the travel industry, and similar fields, providing them with the practical legal knowledge as well as with the language skills essential for careers in the international business world.
